5. Legal remedy

The provisions on legal remedy are set out in Act CXII of 2011 on Informational Self-Determination and Freedom of Information.

If the data subject has objected to processing, the controller investigates the objection within the shortest time possible from the submission of such request, but within 15 days at the latest, makes a decision on the substantiation of the request and informs the applicant of the decision in writing. If the data subject does not agree with the decision made by the controller, or if the controller fails to observe the above due date, the data subject has the right to turn to the court within 30 days of the communication of the decision or from the deadline specified.

In the event of the violation of their rights or in the above cases, the data subject may file action with a court against the controller. The court proceeds in the action as a matter of urgency. Alternatively, such proceedings may also be brought before the court competent according to the data subject's residence or place of stay. Entities or persons that otherwise have no legal capacity may also be parties to the court action. The data protection authority may intervene in the proceedings in the interest of a ruling in the data subject's favour.

The controller shall compensate for any and all damage caused by the unlawful processing of the data subject's data or a breach of the data security requirements. If the controller violates the data subject's rights to personality through the unlawful processing of the data subject's data or a breach of the data security requirements, the data subject may claim compensation from the controller. The controller is also liable for damage caused to the data subject by the processor, and the controller shall also pay the data subject compensation for any breach of the data subject's personal rights by the processor. The controller is released from the liability for the damage caused and the obligation to pay compensation for personality rights breach if the controller can prove that the damage was caused or the data subject's personal rights were violated due to a cause beyond its reasonable control and the scope of processing. The damage shall not be paid and no compensation may be claimed if the damage was caused or the violation of rights caused by the violation of the personality rights arose from the wilful misconduct or gross negligence of the data subject.
